A screenshot of a Twitter mobile interface. At the top, it shows a tweet from "Rap Game Forrest Gump" (@Sixfever) dated March 11, 2018, at 12:14 AM. Below the photo are standard mobile interaction icons: a speech bubble with 19, a retweet icon with 452, a heart icon with 644, and an envelope icon. Below these icons is a reply from "James Huynh @jamez_316" at 9:51 PM - 11 Mar 2019, which reads: "Replies to @Sixfever @WorldWideWob". A "Follow" button is visible on the right side.

There was however a conversation going on between @jamez_316 and @WorldWideWob. It's not unlikely that other things were posted and since deleted.

Things get heated between Russell Westbrook and Utah Jazz fans again. “I’ll f*ck you up. You and your wife,” he says. Not sure what these fans said to him, but he also had issues with Jazz fans during the postseason.

The Utah Jazz and Larry H. Miller Group announced today a permanent ban of the fan who engaged in the inappropriate interaction with the Oklahoma City Thunder's Russell Westbrook last night at Vivint Smart Home Arena. The ban is effective immediately and includes all arena events.

The organization conducted an investigation that found the fan violated the NBA Code of Conduct. The ban is based on excessive and derogatory verbal abuse directed at a player during the game that violated the NBA Code of Conduct.

The Utah Jazz will not tolerate fans who act inappropriately or disrespectfully towards players or officials.

"Everyone deserves the opportunity to enjoy an inclusive environment," said Steve Starks, president of the Utah Jazz. "We believe that abusive behavior does not reflect the values of the Miller family, our organization and the community. We all have a responsibility to respect the game of basketball and, more importantly, each other as human beings.
